COMMERCIAL DREADNAUGHTS. An early revolution in commerce is predicted by the friends of the oil driven liners. A remarkable record has been made by ships recently propelled by internal combusion engines. Within a few days it has been announced that one of the largest ocean steamers in the world, now building, is to have provisions for the carriage of fuel oil, although she will be driven by steam. Shipping experts are so confident of the early perfection of oil burning steamships that they are thus anti-ipating the change of power. It has been estimated that $500,000,000 now invested in ships is endangered by the new motive power. Experts are hard at work perfecting the oil burning motor, there are several large of the property of the new motive power. THE MAN WHO TALKS

When Mrs. Browning said to Charles Kingsiey: "What is the secret of your life? Tell me, that I may make mine beautiful, too." He replied: "I had a friend." Were these three words ever more beautifully used than this in the English language? Mrs. Browning did not have to ask him who this friend was that made life beautiful, for she recognized that such a friend must live in her heart and minister to her life every day that it might be kept so sweet that it attracted attention as the life worth living. I recognize this friend and so perhaps do you, as the friend of all who open their hearts to Him and invite Him in; and why, think you, is not the beautiful life more common? Most men when they start out to pose as good fellows do not know where they are bound, although they are sure they are on the way. The good fellow has to be born in the hearts of his associates to gain a permanent abiding place there; and he wakes up to the fact that he is the real thing by their repeated, honest assurances. The artificial article does not know this, so he squanders his patrimony and does all sorts of generous and foolish things to realize an ambition that is vain and that has nothing in it worth striving for. He is a good fellow until his money and his character is gone, after which he is usually casually referred to as a fool by those he would have won.

The second of February is blessel for foretelling an early spring or blamed for predicting opposite. What can she know, poor thing, about groundhogs and their fears of their shadows! The people who pin their faith are the ones who are affrighted at shadows. Candlemas Day, this same day is called, and it has often been considered the central dividing.

Neighbor and near friend to Lowell

Neighbor and near friend to Lowell is Longfellow, also one of February's offerings to the world's literature. Cherished above most authors at "Half your wood and half your hay Must be in store on Candlemas Day."

Then comes St. Valentine's Day, with its many opportunities for fun and foolishness, for Cupid and cupidity. The children would dislike to take Valentine's Day from February's management, and many of their elders have the same feeling. More than one writing-lesk in town, if ransacked, might reveal hidden treasures to the gaze of outsiders, who little suspect the romance se long carefully concealed from all except those immediately concerned.

So greatly did he excel as a poet, that we often overlook or underestimate his prose writings, yet few be found than those springing from his foot-wanderings over Europe, where he grew so familiar with the gaze of outsiders, who little suspect the romance se long carefully concealed from all except those immediately concerned.

cultivated. A good story is told on a darky preacher who was being quizzad by his presiding elder concerning his methods of work. Uncle Erastus was finally asked if he had any particular weakness or besetting sin, and after thinking a moment he said: "guess it is lack of confidence in God." What do you mean by that?" asked the presiding elder. "Well, doctor, the fact is that when I pray for anything and don't get it right off, I usually go to work and make some other arrangements." We quote Erastus not to justify his seeming unwillingness to await the slow working out of the divine plan, yet on general principes the man who is an adept at "making other arrangements" when hampered in the execution of his purposes is usually the man who succeeds.

We all run up against obstacles and embarrassments, foreseen or unexpected, and the natural tendency is to low he fore them, suying. "What's the use; I have done all I can. I'll have to left it silde." I sometimes call upon a business man and find him walking up and down his office in a way that reminds me of a caged lion. I have learned on closer intimacy with him that this is but a mark of his irresistible energy, his undaunted spirit which will not brook defeat, which when one avenue of activity is closed changes to another outlet; thwarted or opposed or caught in a thicket of difficulties, he does not throw up the sponge, but goes at the matter from another angle, tries another expedient.
